S.A.L.T Bar Cocktail: Lion Heart

Discover our Sea and Land Taste

Gladiators were the superstar athletes of the Roman world, worshipped by millions and revered by physicians, who would recommend drinking their blood to cure all ailments.

While that might seem a little far-fetched in today's less bloodthirsty climate, this bespoke cocktail created for Silversea's S.A.L.T. program channels our rich Italian heritage. Using Italian blood oranges and egg white as a base, mixologists blended tangy citrus gin with grappa for a drink that is a modern twist on gin sour.

Topped off with a dash of bitter and lemon zest, and you've got a perfect cocktail which will give you the heart of a lion, the soul of a gladiator and a taste of authentic Italy.

One spoon or two?

INGREDIENTS:

- 1 oz. Egg white
- 1/2 oz. Sugar syrup
- 1 oz. Fresh lemon juice
- 1/2 oz. Boiron Blood Orange
- 1 oz. Nonino Amaro Quintessentia
- 1 oz. Malfy con Limone gin

HOW TO PREPARE:

- Collect a cocktail shaker and add all of the ingredients
- Add Top with cubed ice and shake for 10 seconds
- Fine strain into another cocktail shaker and shake for 10 seconds without ice
- Pour into glass, add 3 dashes of Peychaud's Bitters into the foam
- Express the lemon zest over the cocktail and discard

WHERE TO ENJOY:

PERU'S CARAPULCRA: A DISH FULL OF STORIES

Peru is home to many cuisines and its most celebrated dishes bear witness to centuries of migration and intermingling of cultures. Take Carapulcra for example: One of the oldest and most storied of Peru's traditional dishes, it is a stew of pork or chicken, dried potatoes, peanuts and chili peppers that tells the story of Andean, Incan, Creole, Italian and Afro-Peruvian influences on the fascinating, multi-ethnic foodways of this country.

Recipes include: Carapulcra stew and Sopa Seca

HAUTE POCKETS: EMPANADAS

Explore the world of empanadas, the half-moon shaped pastry-wrapped pies. With a dough that can be made from corn, flour or plantains, and fillings that range from gooey cheese to shredded beef to dessert versions filled with tart fruit and dulce de leche, the varieties are as limitless as the love for them across Central and South America.

Recipes include: Shrimp-filled Morocho Empanadas and Empanadas de Viento, a sweet cheese-filled variety.

CUISINE AT THE CROSSROADS: FOODS OF PANAMA

The cuisine of Panama is a fascinating blend of Spanish, French, Chinese and Afro-Caribbean influence, embracing the indigenous recipes of groups like the Guna Yala and Ngöbe-Buglé peoples. As the story goes, 'Panamá', meaning 'abundance of fish', was the indigenous name of a small fishermen village; five centuries later, it is a place where shrimp wontons can be found in the corner bodega and a fried snapper might be served with a hint of curry.

Recipes include: Ceviche de Corvina (seabass) and red snapper Pargo Rojo al Escabeche

GET STUFFED: THE ART OF AREPAS

The crisp and fluffy versatile corn cake with an interesting history is beloved across Colombia, Venezuela and Panama and is a great vehicle for many savoury fillings.

Recipes include: Queso Campesino and Reina Pepiada Arepas; Ají Picante Colombian chilli sauce.

GRAINS OF THE GODS: CORN

Believed by Mayans to be material from which humanity was created, maize or corn is at the very heart of Mexican myth and identity. Explore the many uses of this staple crop that fed and shaped a continent—and changed the world.

Recipes include: Zesty Mexican Corn Salad and Llapingachos, Ecuadorian Griddled Corn Cakes.

Everything You Need to Know for Your Mediterranean Cruise

By Mary Forgione

Before I had traveled anywhere, I imagined what the "Grand Tour of Europe" would be like. In the mid-18th century, such a tour was intended to school young university grads in classical European culture and arts. Venice, Florence and Rome were the essential stops, and ancient ruins in Pompeii and Naples were tacked on as well.

Traveling today to pivotal destinations in the Mediterranean remains popular, especially when done by cruise, which offers far more than Italy. Here's a guide to help you craft your own cruise tour to the most-visited region of the world.

WHERE, EXACTLY, IS THE MEDITERRANEAN?

Geographically speaking, the Mediterranean region is in the middle of Europe, Africa and Asia. The Mediterranean Sea stretches 2,500 miles from the Atlantic Ocean at the Strait of Gibraltar to southwestern Turkey in the east. It spans 500 miles north to south, from southernmost Croatia to Libya. The Tyrrhenian and Adriatic seas off Italy, and the Aegean Sea between Greece and Turkey, are part of the mighty Mediterranean.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO VISIT THE MEDITERRANEAN?

The city of Marseilles, France, one of Silversea's ports on some Mediterranean cruises./Shutterstock

There's no one destination that is the Mediterranean; 20-plus countries and other entities are found along the Mediterranean Coast. Bordering the sea's European side are Gibraltar, Spain, France, Monaco, Italy, Malta, Slovenia, Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro, Albania, Greece and Cyprus.

Turkey has a foot in Europe and Asia; Syria, Lebanon, Israel and Palestine are on the Asian continent's shoreline. Egypt, Libya, Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco lie on the African continent, bordering the sea to the south.

The Mediterranean region also extends to destinations with similar climates – marked by mild winters and hot, dry summers – even though they don't border the sea. Portugal, San Marino, Andorra and Slovenia are considered within the Mediterranean.

WHY TAKE A MEDITERRANEAN CRUISE?

Kerkyra on the Greek island of Corfu/Shutterstock

The best thing about going on a Mediterranean cruise is that you can keep going back for more and not repeat a destination. The number of destinations with hilly landscapes, beautiful beaches, ancient ruins, cosmopolitan cities and distinctive cuisines abound.

A cruise on the new Silver Nova, which launched Aug. 14, will take you to places as varied as Barcelona, Spain; St.- Tropez; France; Monte Carlo, Monaco; Civitavecchia (Rome), Venice; Sicily; Split and Dubrovnik, Croatia; the Greek Island of Corfu, among other places, and you still will not have seen it all.

Cruises offer an easy way to visit some of the most scenic and historic destinations in a single trip. (If you're wondering how to choose your Mediterranean cruise, our guide can help you decide.)

WHEN SHOULD I VISIT THE MEDITERRANEAN?

You may see the almond trees in bloom in Spain's Mallorca on a spring sail./Shutterstock

The best time to cruise the Mediterranean is in spring, summer or fall, from early April through late November. Many Mediterranean cruise itineraries sail during these optimal months. In winter, some attractions, hotels and restaurants may be closed, limiting your options.

WHAT ARE THE HOTTEST MONTHS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN?

Summer in Rome can get warm, but there's always gelato to the rescue./Shutterstock

The hottest months in the Med are July and August, and this summer has been no exception. Athens sees highs of 93 degrees Fahrenheit and lows of 75 degrees in those months. Temperatures in Rome reach 89 degrees and dip to 66 degrees in July and August. Water temps also reach the nearly tropical 70s.

WHEN TO VISIT THE GREEK ISLANDS

Elia Beach on Mykonos. The Greek islands can be warm in summer, but the ocean is a moderating influence./Shutterstock

April through early October brings good weather and warm temperatures to Greece. In June, destinations such as Mykonos, Corfu and Crete show temperatures in the mid-70s and highs in the low 80s. If you are a heat seeker who doesn't mind summer crowds, July and August temperatures climb to the low 90s with high humidity.

WHEN TO VISIT MALTA

Vibrant brings higher temps and humidity to Malta, but it's also the time for parties./Shutterstock.

Consider a cruise to Malta from June to September, when high temperatures reach 84 degrees in June, and 89 in July and August. Humidity reaches more than 60 percent in those months, but it's also the time when locals and visitors come to party on beaches and in clubs.

WHEN TO VISIT THE BAY OF KOTOR IN MONTENEGRO

Early spring means moderate temps at the Bay of Kotor in Montenegro./Shutterstock

April to October is a good time to visit Montenegro. High temperatures in May hit the mid-70s, while June highs climb to 84 degrees, and July can top out at 91 degrees. Spring and early fall provide cruisers with milder weather.

WHEN TO VISIT BARCELONA

Barcelona at sunrise shows the whimsical side of the city./Shutterstock

May through early October show mild to hot temperatures in the coastal city of Spain's Barcelona. Highs reach 75 degrees in June, 81 in July and 82 in August. July and August are notably the busiest time at beaches and other tourist attractions.

WHEN TO VISIT DUBROVNIK

Old-town Dubrovnik, Croatia/Shutterstock

That depends on your interests. If you like to explore ancient history, think about an itinerary that calls on Rome, Pompeii, Athens and Istanbul. If you want to kick back at gorgeous beaches, think about a cruise along the coast of Spain, the French Riviera or the Greek Islands. What you enjoy and what time of year you travel will shape your Mediterranean tour.

Here are some top destinations to consider.

AMALFI COAST, ITALY

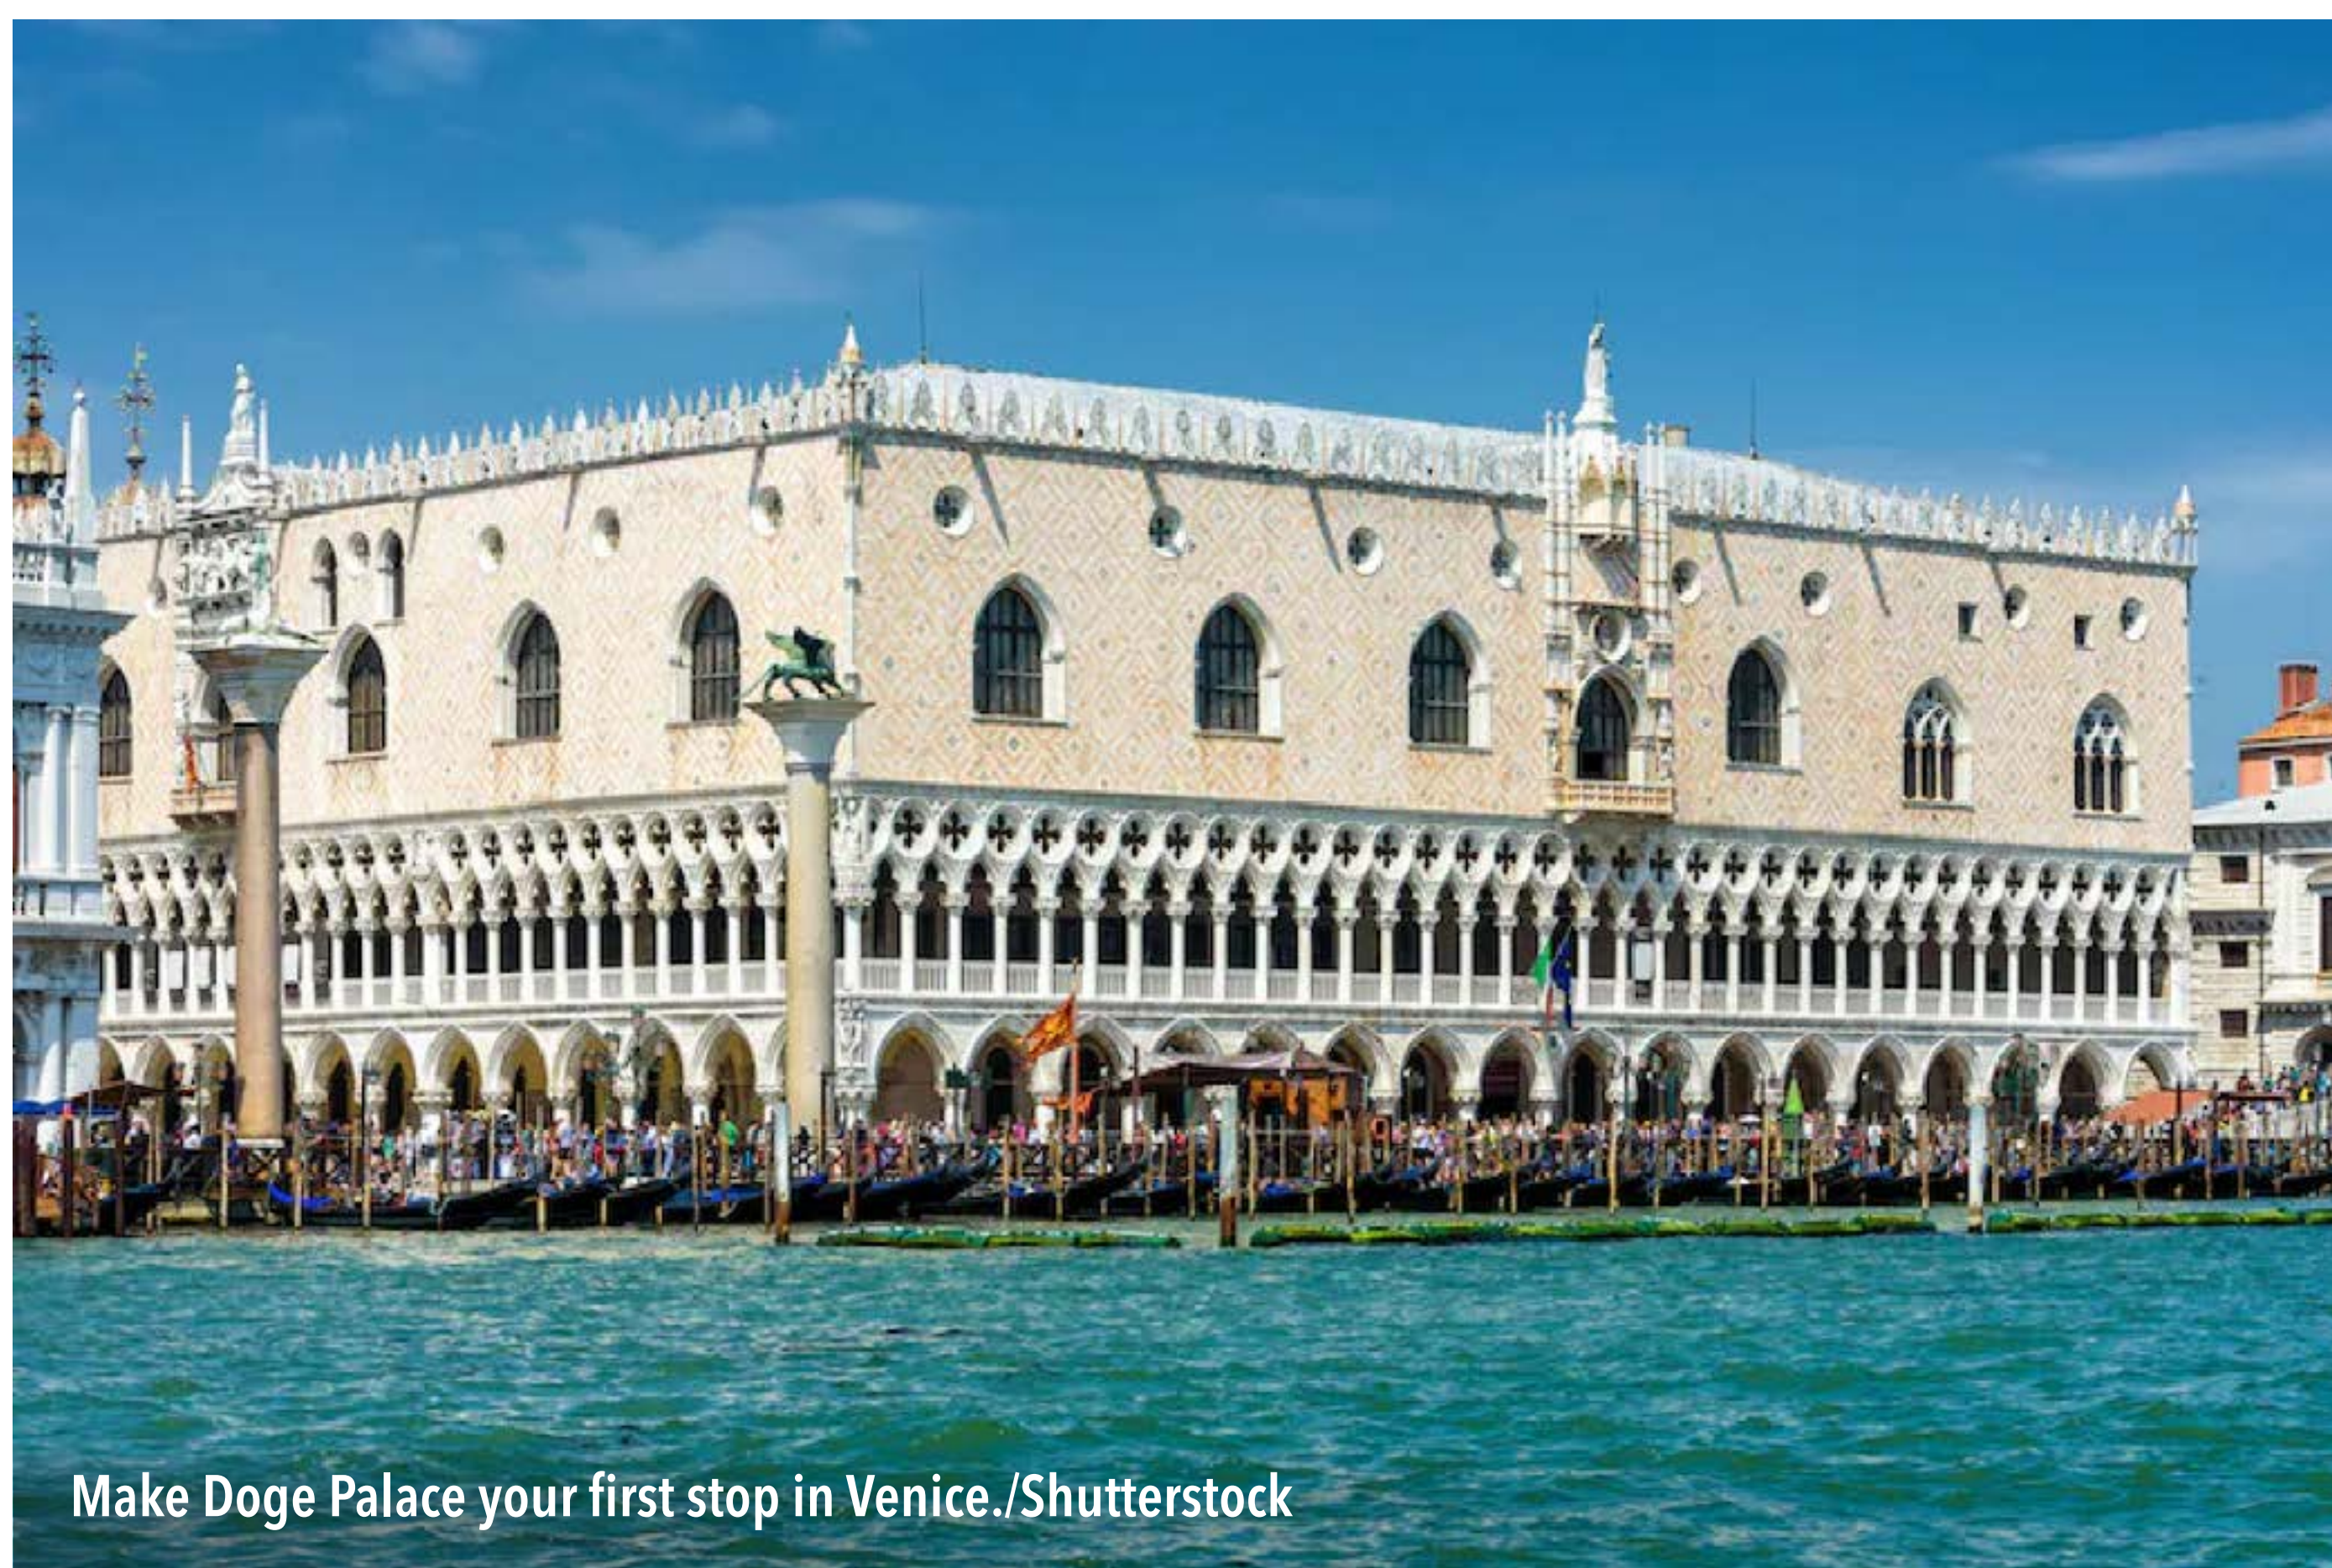

Marina Grande on Capri at twilight/Shutterstock

Nowhere in the world looks like the Amalfi Coast. Villages thrive on steep cliffs above the coast south of Naples with dramatic and stunning effect. Amalfi, Cetara, Positano, Ravello and nine other villages were designated UNESCO World Heritage sites for being “an outstanding example of a Mediterranean landscape, with exceptional cultural and natural scenic values.”

The once-quiet towns and villages have become popular destinations, especially in spring and summer. Life there moves at a slower pace, and so should you. It’s a good place to practice mindful travel, which may mean disconnecting from your cellphone to enjoy the splendor of the coast.

Discover the hillside villages and hidden coves on a vintage Vespa tour to explore Positano, Amalfi and mountain-top Ravello, or hop on a boat tour to see views of hilly Conca, Praiano and Furore from the water. The Amalfi Highway covers about 35 miles, without hopping off to see villages, but it can be traffic-filled and narrow in places, making a drive difficult. Ferries regularly travel to the isle of Capri where you can marvel at beaches with turquoise waters and gawk at opulent villas.

VENICE, ITALY

Make Doge Palace your first stop in Venice./Shutterstock

Venice seems compact and demure, but don’t be fooled. The Venetian Republic of the 15th century had powerful doges, or dukes, who ruled over a vast empire that included modern-day Croatia, Slovenia and other parts of Italy. Venice left indelible cultural and architectural influences on sites up and down the Adriatic Coast.

The city built on canals became an important maritime power partly by controlling a trading hub between Asia and Europe. Cars are nowhere to be found in Venice, but gondola rides and water taxis are a fun way to get around. Follow the trail of the doges and their rich history when you are deciding what to see in Venice. First stop: the Gothic style Doge Palace, or Palazzo Ducale, which is now a museum. It has changed over centuries but remained the most politically important building in Venice. Government offices in grand style were housed here, especially the ornate Great Council Chamber where walls and ceilings are covered with painted scenes and overlaid with gilded framing.

The building also housed the private apartments of the doge and his family, which are also open to visitors. The nearby Basilica of St. Marks was the doge's chapel, a multi-domed church with Byzantine, Romanesque and Islamic touches. All structures open to St. Mark's Square, with its towering Campanile and pre-Renaissance clock tower. The square was the heart of Venice when the doges ruled. It still is,

SICILY, ITALY

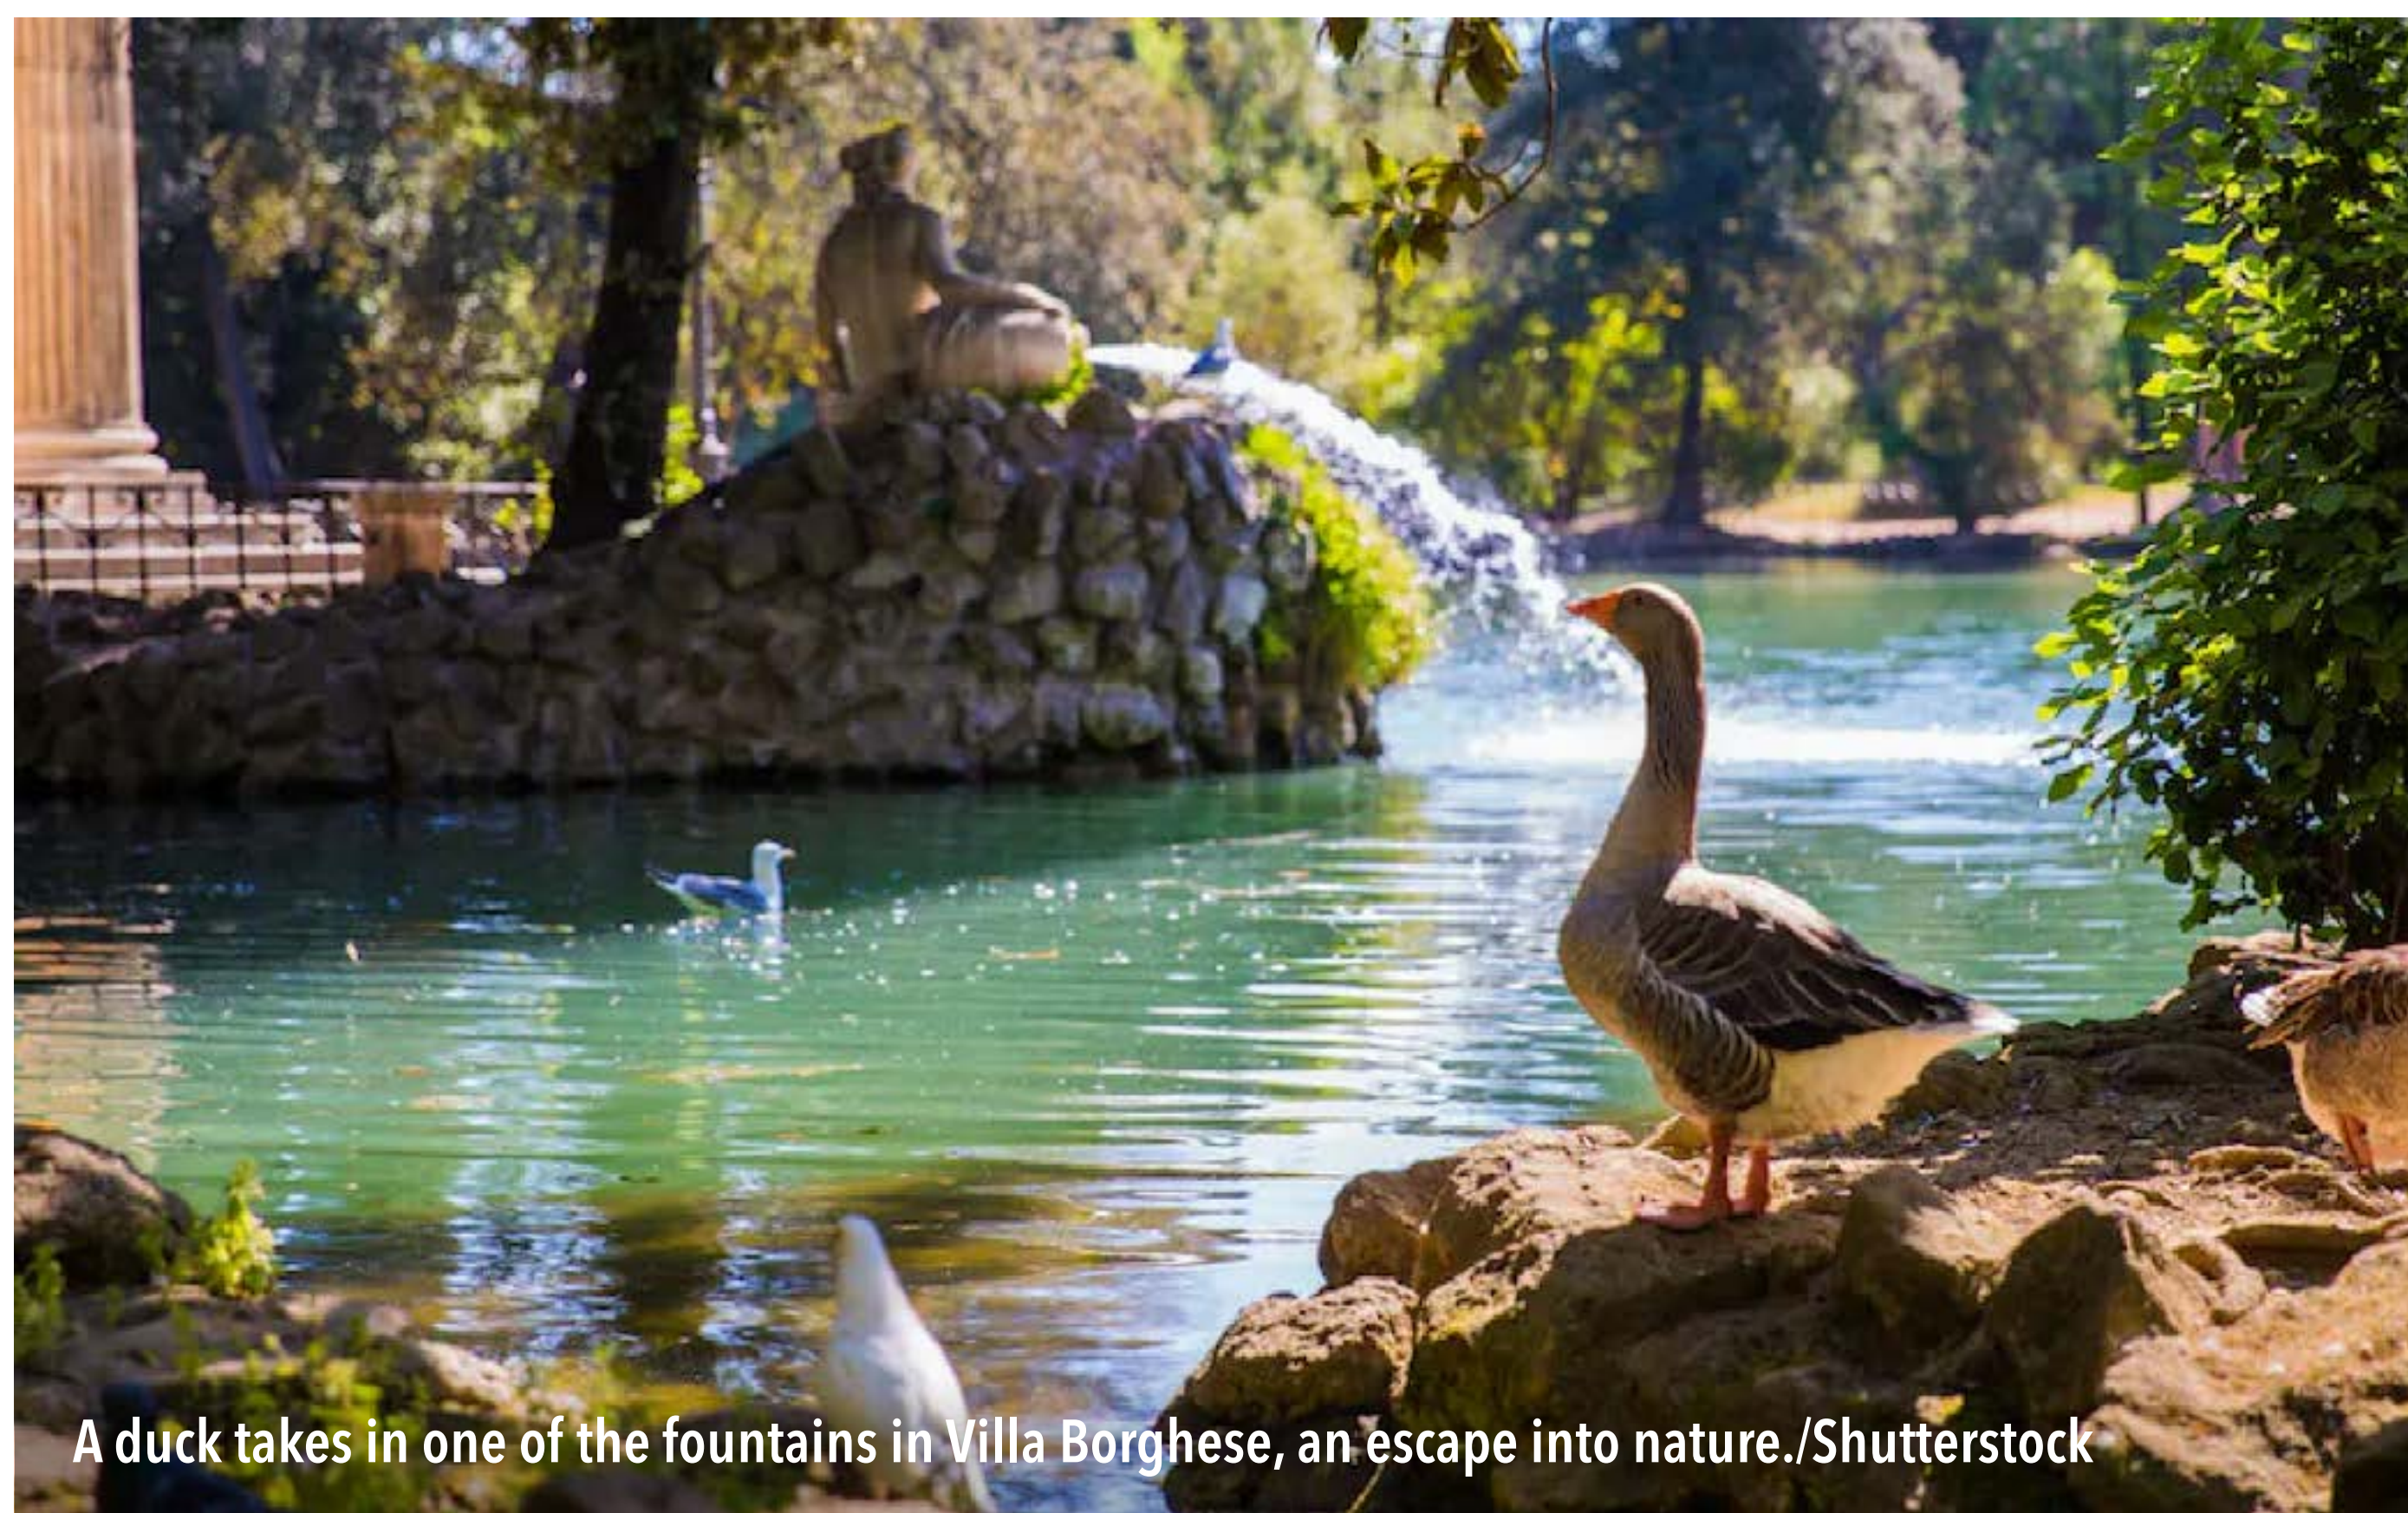

Vineyards near Mt. Etna. The sea breeze and the warm sun make the growing season longer than usual./ Shutterstock

Sicily, the largest Mediterranean island at the toe of Italy's boot, has remnants of many ancient cultures, including ancient Greeks, Byzantines, Romans, Arabs and Normans. The most impressive and best-preserved collection of Greek architecture stands at the Valley of the Temples near Agrigento, about 80 miles south of Palermo.

The island's best-known landmark isn't manmade. Mt. Etna, an active volcano south of Taormina, tops off at 11,055 feet above elevation. It's the tallest of the volcanoes of Italy. You can drive almost to the summit and sometimes see the red-orange glow of lava. (A "small eruption" has been ongoing since November 2022, NASA says.) A cable car also can take you up the mountain.

Despite its active state, parts of Mt. Etna have become an important area for winemaking in Sicily. The unusual terrain attracts fans who brave barren volcanic slopes to visit vineyards 2,000 feet above sea level. Back at the coast, you should sample Sicily's beaches, particularly those near Trapani, not far from Palermo, Sicily's capital. Expect crowds of locals and visitors during the steamier summer months on the island.

ROME, ITALY

A duck takes in one of the fountains in Villa Borghese, an escape into nature./Shutterstock

The Italian capital is inland along the Tiber River and claims Mediterranean status by its proximity to the sea (about 15 miles away) along with its mild climate. Rome's city center remains so true to its roots that if you haven't visited in a few decades, you will likely still know your way around.

The Romans built the city in the 8th century and ruled their empire for more than 1,000 years. Remnants of the Colosseum where gladiator battles ensued and the Forum, the civic center, reveal architecture on a grand scale.

As the Roman Empire faltered, Christianity started to take hold in Rome. The first church, known as St. Peter's Basilica, broke ground in the 4th century. After it fell into disrepair in the 16th century, sculptor and painter Michelangelo was tapped to design the church with the grand dome that stands today in the Vatican. It's not far from the masterpiece he created on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel.

For less formal touring, check out Rome's more casual hangouts to people-watch, relax and rest your feet. Locals and visitors can be found at the Trevi Fountain, the Spanish Steps and the cafe-filled Piazza Navona, although you will find crowds in the busy summer season. If natural space is on your list, head to the Villa Borghese to fountain-hop and tour the gardens.

NICE, FRANCE

Promenade des Anglais winds through the streets of old town Nice, France./Shutterstock

Bask on the beaches in the capital of the French Riviera and its nearby villages. La Reserve and Coco Beach are public beaches not far from the center of town that locals and visitors frequent. The popular pebble-and-sand beach at Villefranche-sur-Mer is about 15 minutes away.

Farther out, you can visit Plage de la Bocca, a beach in Cannes, which boasts turquoise waters and good snorkeling opportunities. Or take a 15-minute ferry ride to the pebbly beaches of Île Sainte-Marguerite.

Walk the grand Promenade des Anglais, a 2.5-mile-wide path along the shore, and explore the winding streets of the old town. Visit the beautiful 17th-century Sainte-Réparate Cathedral before heading to the market and cafes at Cours Saleya. Foods not to miss: an open-faced pastry with olives, onions and anchovies, called pissaladière, and a pizza-style snack made from chickpea flour called socca.

ATHENS, GREECE

Athens is not only a port town on the Mediterranean Sea but it's Greece's capital and largest city. Like Rome, early Greek culture shaped much of Western civilization. Athens, one of the oldest cities in the world, was a city-state heralded as the birthplace of democracy.

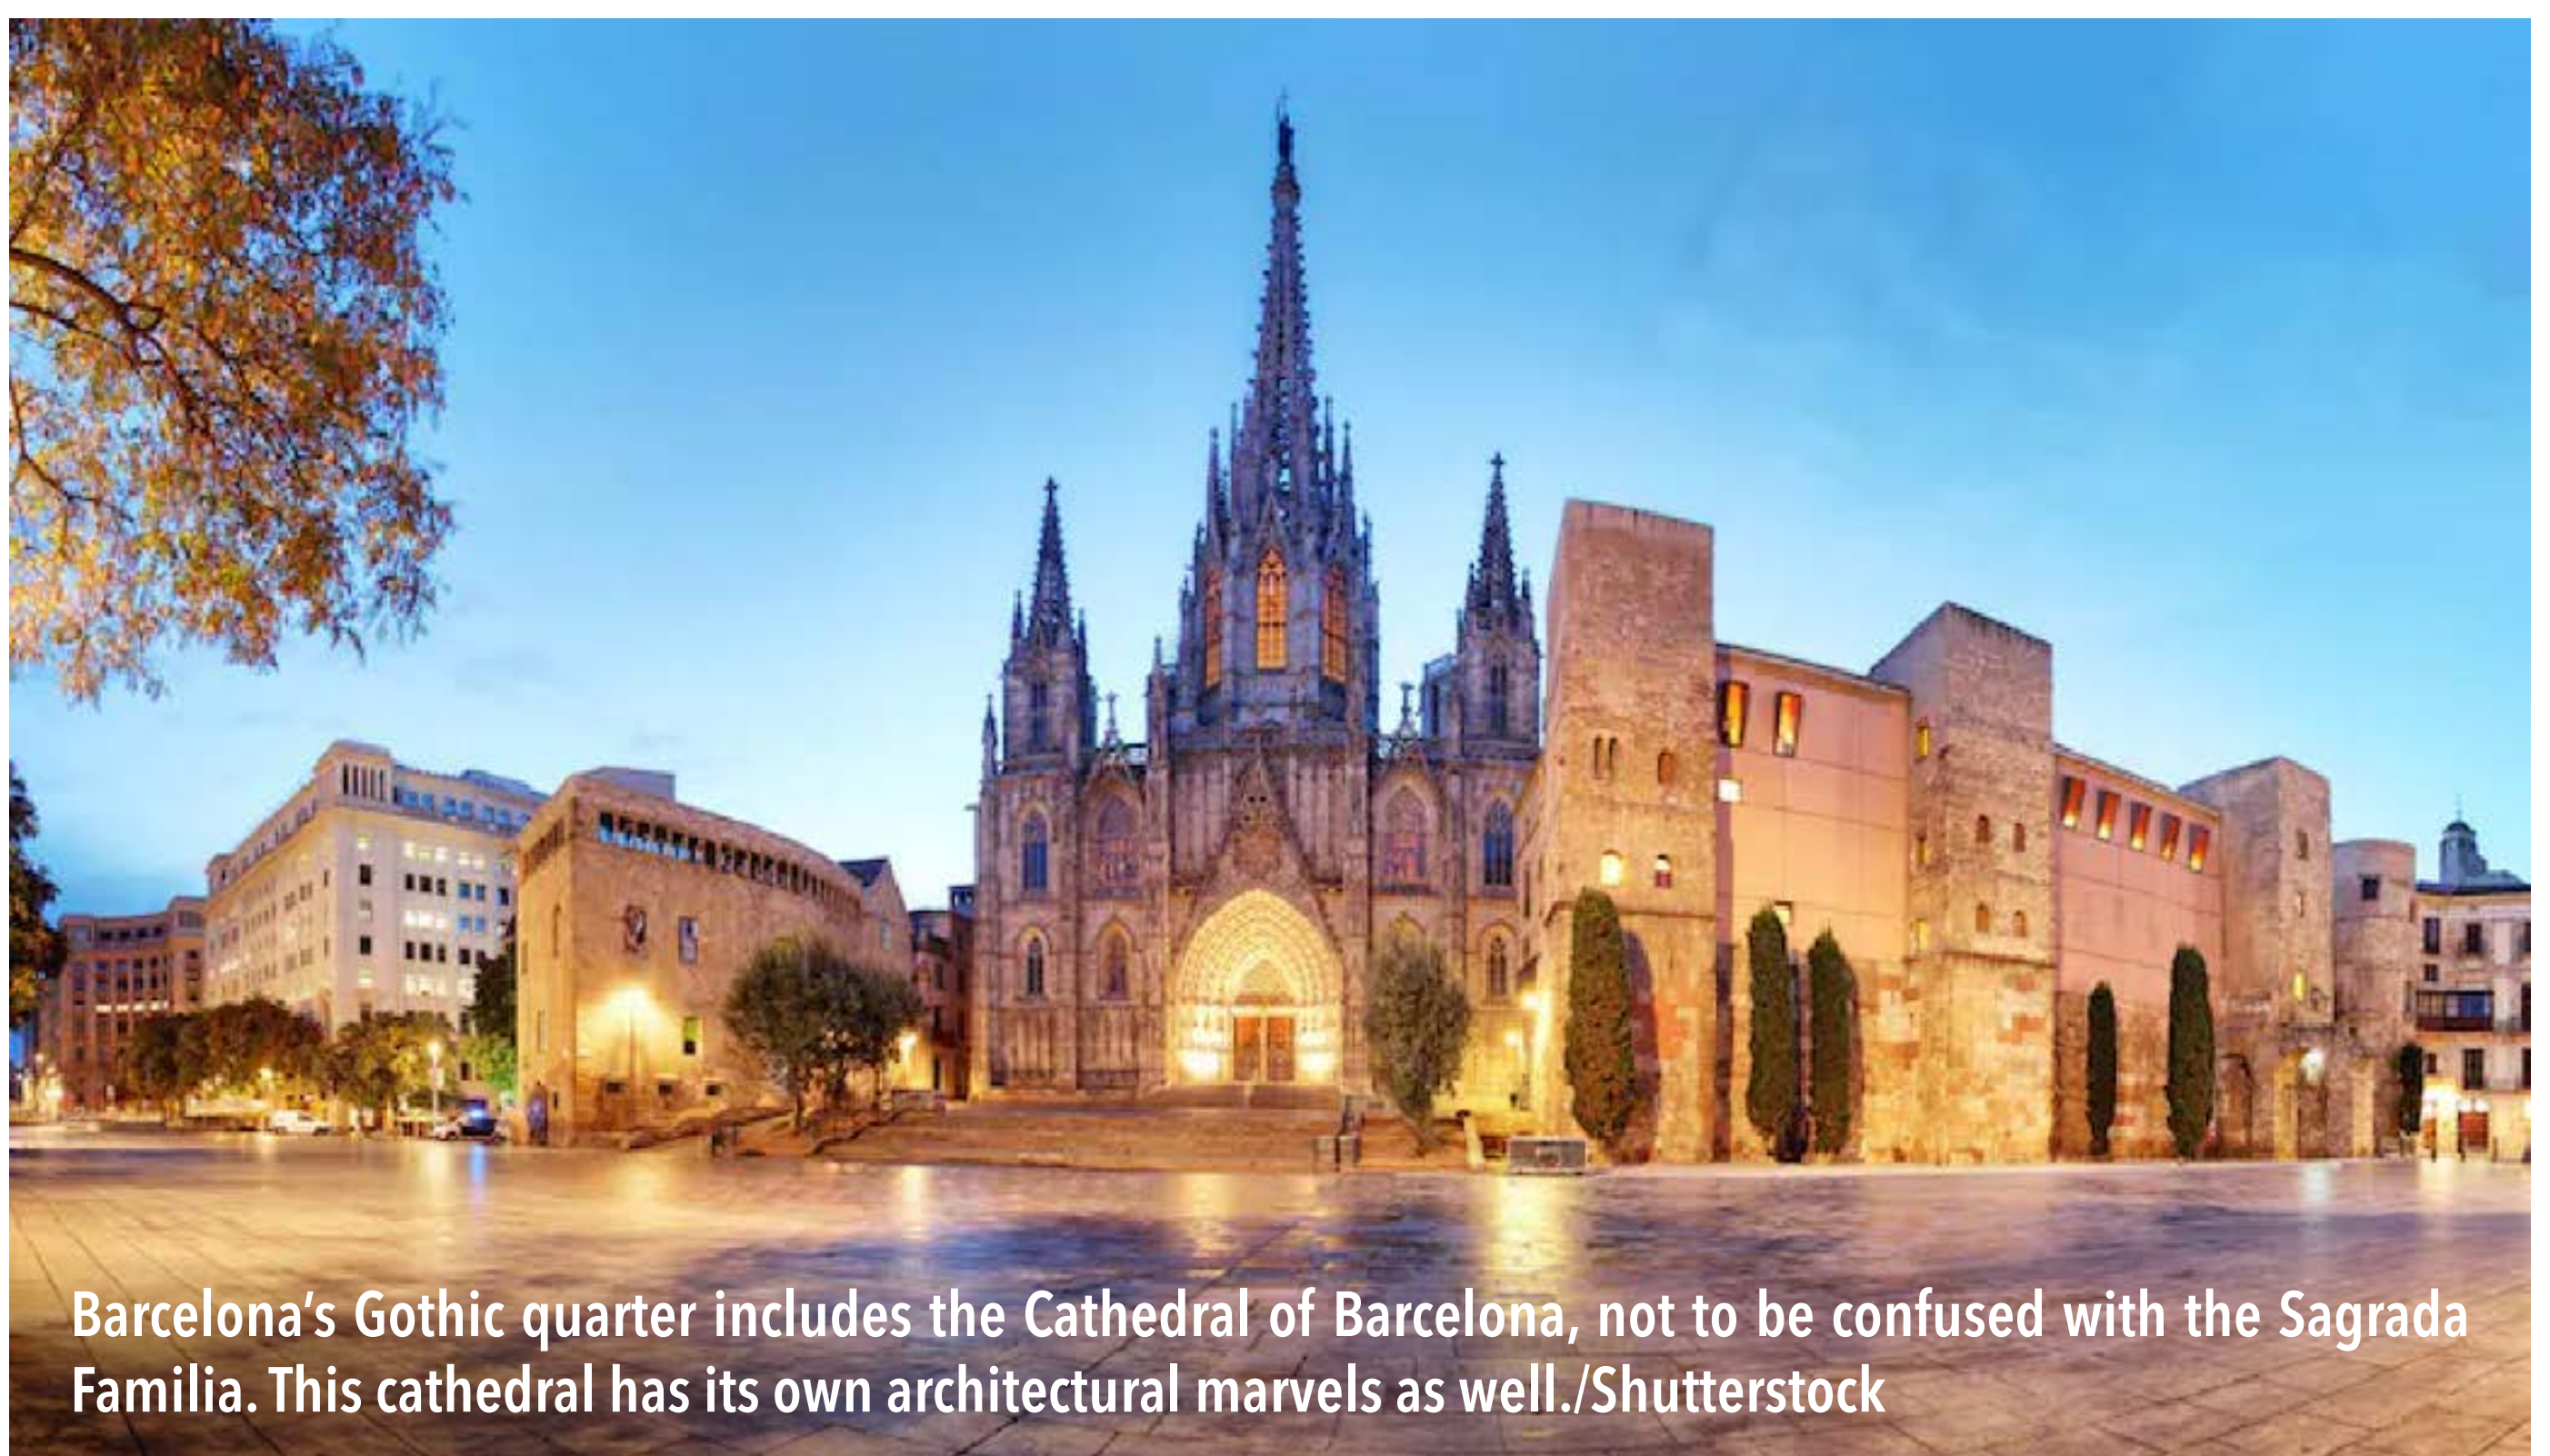

You can find remnants of the classical city at the Acropolis, built as a citadel, and the Parthenon, an ancient temple built to honor the god Athena. Walk the city and you'll find more ancient sites, such as the Arch of Hadrian (built to welcome the Roman emperor) and several pagan temples.

Parthenon, Athens, Greece, was built in the fifth century BCE./Shutterstock.

When you're ready for gorgeous beaches and authentic Greek cuisine, head to the islands. It's easy to hop a ferry from Athens to one of more than 200 inhabited islands. Fresh yogurt and olive oil are staples of what we consider the Mediterranean diet, along with fresh vegetables and fish. Cuisines on the islands vary. Vegetable and bean dishes dominate in the Aegean isles while spicy fish stews are typical on the Ionian island of Corfu.

BARCELONA, SPAIN

Barcelona's Gothic quarter includes the Cathedral of Barcelona, not to be confused with the Sagrada Familia. This cathedral has its own architectural marvels as well./Shutterstock

Barcelona's location has made it the main Mediterranean port for Spain, but any semblance to other resort towns ends there. Barcelona has its own cultural identity and language (Catalan) and is known for being singularly different.

To visit Barcelona is to immerse oneself in the work of Antoni Gaudí, the architect who gifted his adopted hometown with whimsical and glorious creations. Start with the Sagrada Familia, his massive cathedral with leafy and intricate canopy ceiling and soaring trees as arch supports. Gaudí also designed the Park Güell, filled with colorful mosaics in the shapes of animals, and several apartment buildings worth touring. Seven of Gaudí's creations make up a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Other things to do in this coastal town: Take a walking tour of the Gothic Quarter and marvel at the grand-scale cathedral, a local favorite. Take advantage of Barcelona's good weather with a bike tour along the coast or a stand-up paddle board session on the beach.

MONTE CARLO, MONACO

The tiny enclave of Monte Carlo sits on the French Riviera between the French Alps and the Mediterranean Sea. It's the most popular district in Monaco and the world's second-smallest nation state (it covers less than a square mile) after the Vatican.

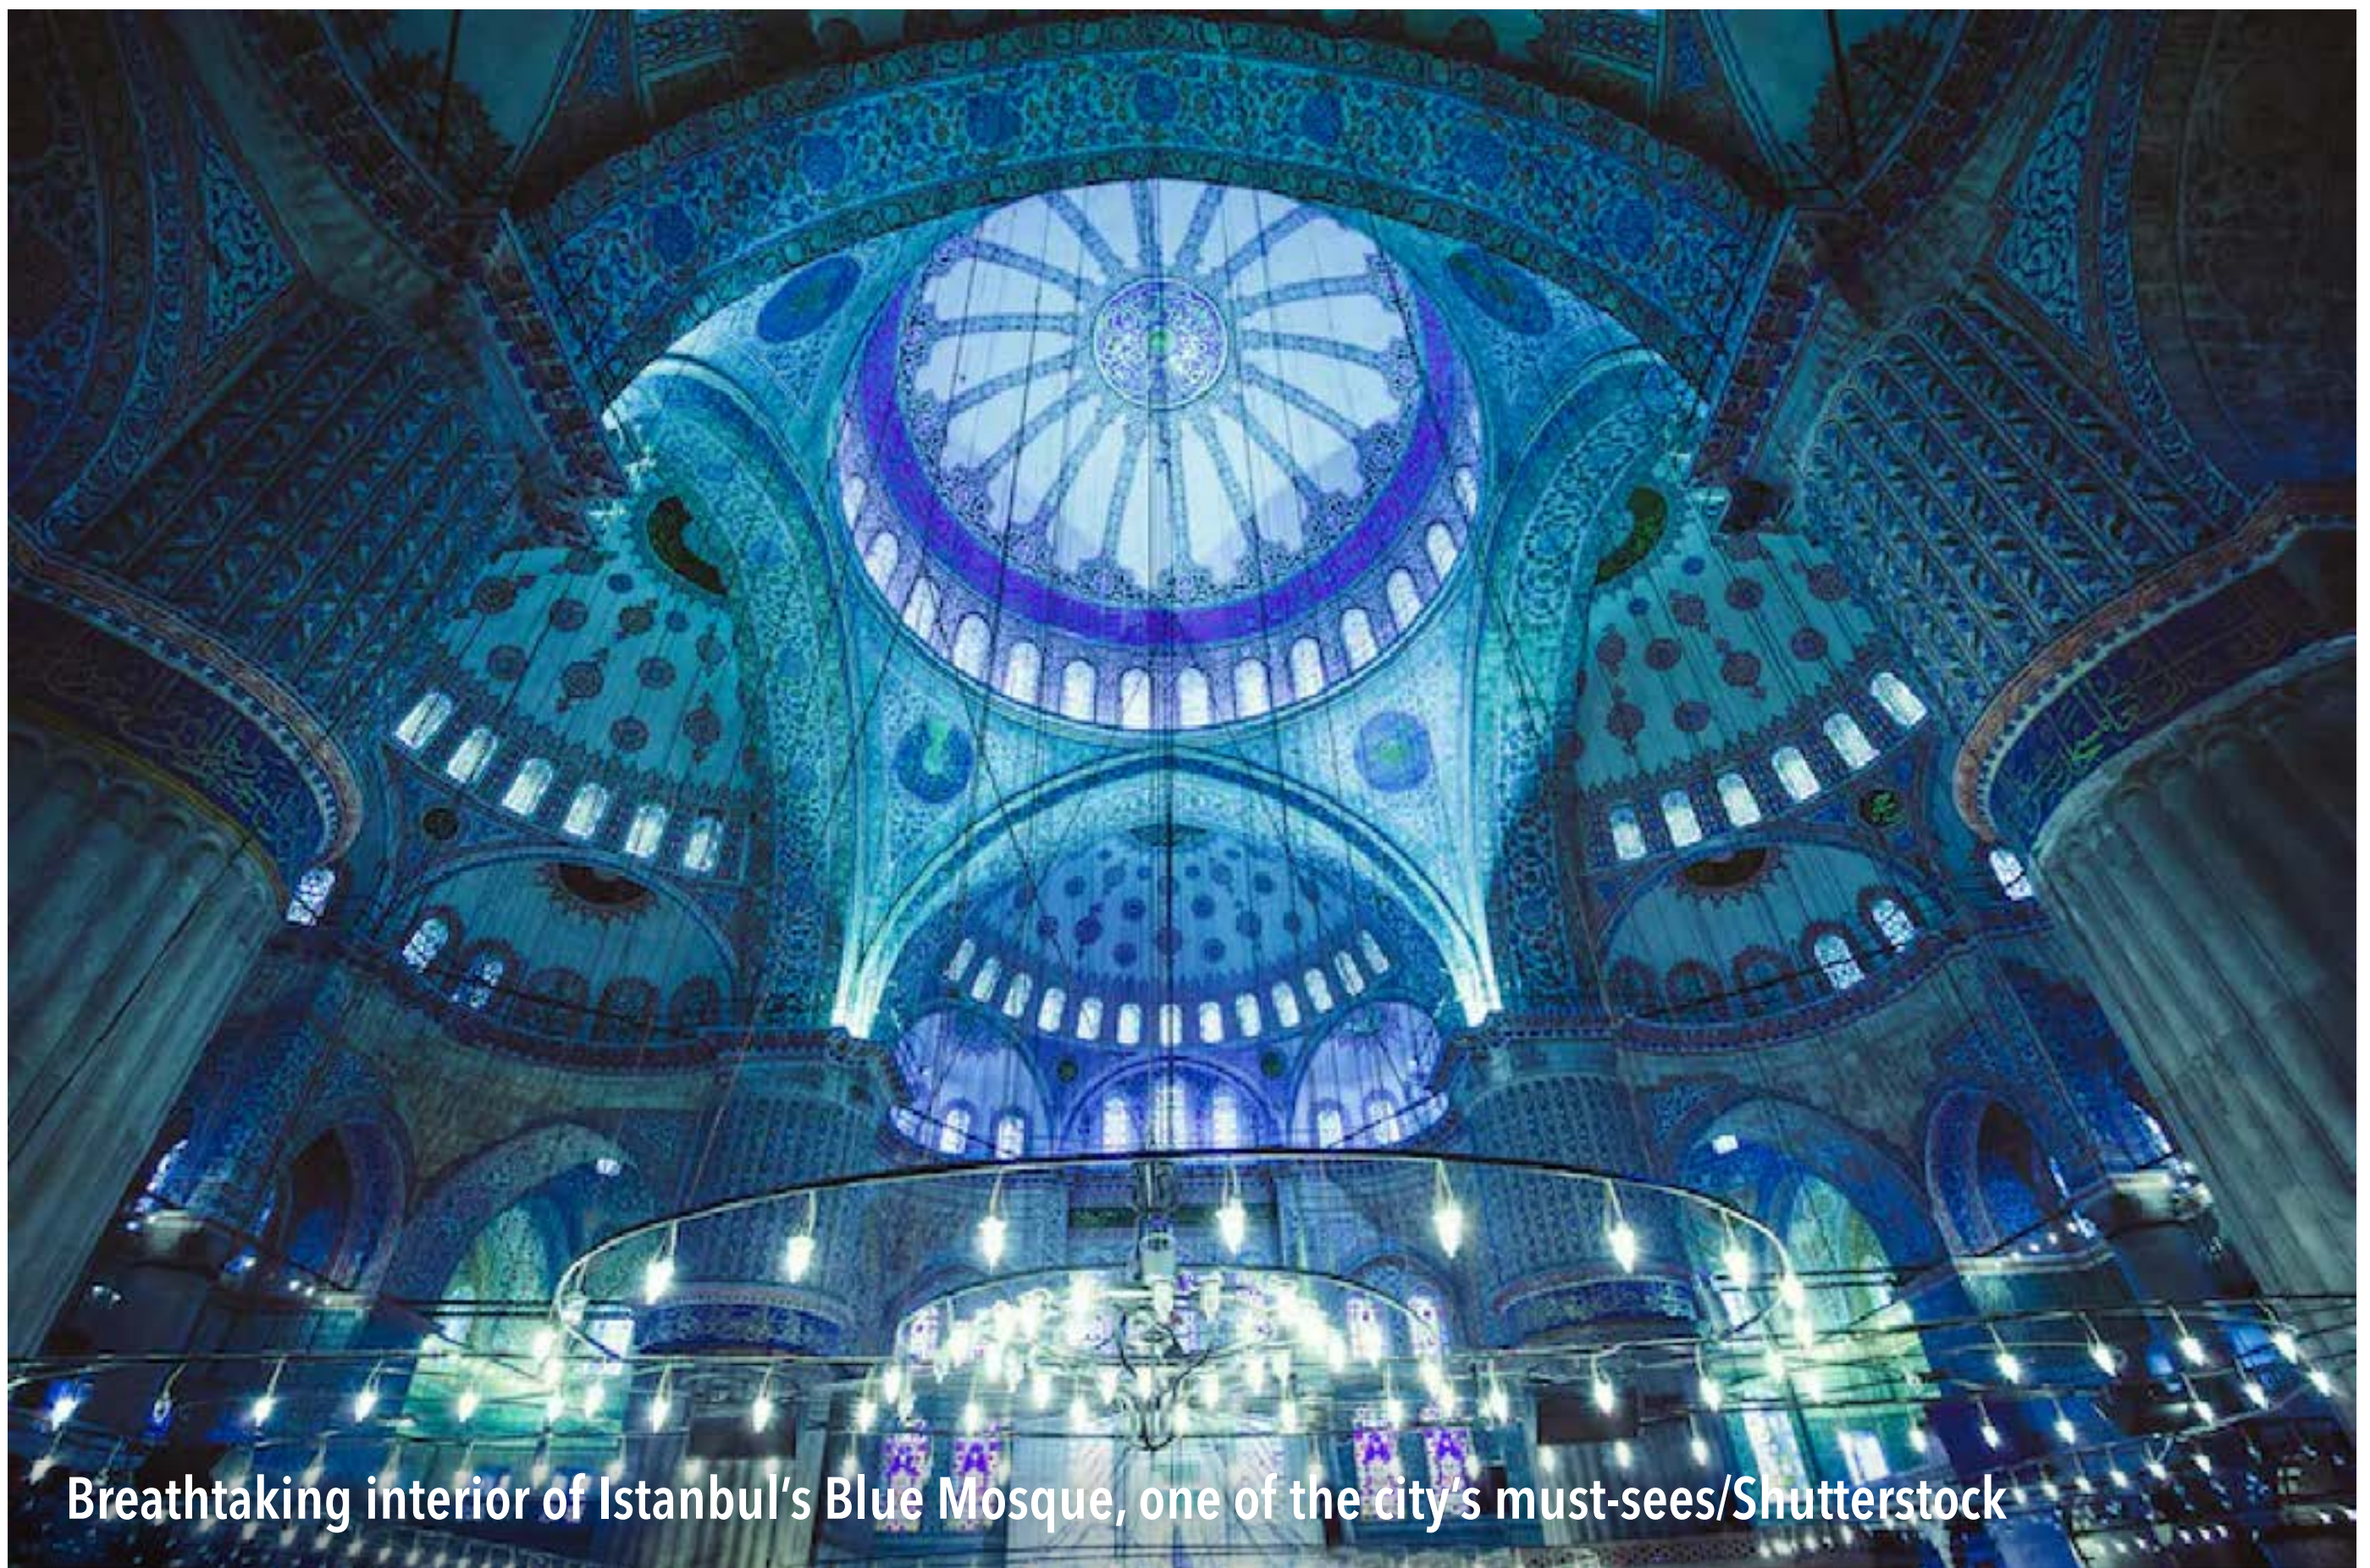

Mix the elegance of the late Princess Grace with the unflinching cool of James Bond and you get a feel for the Riviera town's reputation as a symbol of luxury and glamour for more than a century. Even if you're not a gambler, visit the palace-like Monte Carlo Casino (featured in two Bond films) to appreciate the lavish decor and design inside the Beaux-Arts-style building that's been a celebrity magnet for more than a century.

This is the Mediterranean at its classiest. The casino, built in the 19th century, houses the city's ballet and opera. If you go to the gaming rooms, take a page from 007 and dress smartly. You won't be allowed in if you wear shorts, jeans with holes, running shoes or flip-flops.

Other places to drink in Monte Carlo's luxe vibe: the lounge at the opulent Hotel Metropole and the landmark brasserie Cafe de Paris. From downtown, you can walk or bicycle ride on the twisty street course of the annual Monte Carlo Grand Prix held each spring.

Exploring Monaco beyond the wealthy haze of Monte Carlo means embracing its natural beauty. Head to the ever-present seaside and walk one (or both) well-established paths to neighboring French towns. The paths from Monte Carlo to Cap d'Ail and splendid Mala Beach (about an hour each way) reveal the Riviera's glorious azure waters, hilly terrain, cliffside villas and hidden beaches.

ISTANBUL, TURKEY

Breathtaking interior of Istanbul's Blue Mosque, one of the city's must-sees/Shutterstock

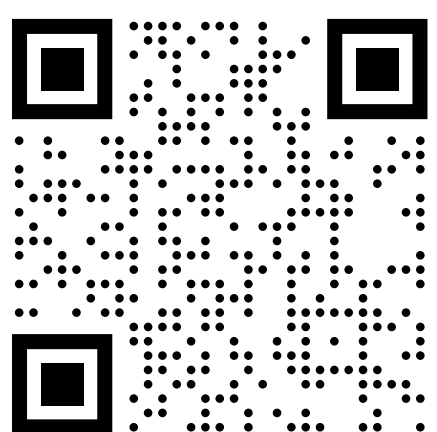

Istanbul is the largest city and principal port in Turkey, straddling two continents separated by the Bosphorus Strait. The city is not on the Mediterranean Sea (only southern Turkey shares the shoreline) but is loosely considered part of the Mediterranean because of similarities in climate (namely its hot, dry summers).

The mosques of Istanbul stand as grand architectural wonders and important religious sites in a city that has survived for 2,500 years. Start with the Hagia Sophia, built when the city was called Constantinople and was the capital of the Byzantine Empire. It was built as a church in the 6th century and transformed into a mosque when the Ottoman Empire took over more than 1,000 years later. Its massive dome and tile mosaics loom over visitors who see at once the ancient church and the current mosque.

The Süleymaniye Mosque, built in the 16th- and the 17th-century, and the Blue Mosque, named for its blue tiles hand made in the city of Iznik, are architectural must-sees.

It's worth walking to the Galata or Ataturk bridges over the Golden Horn to see sweeping views of the city and its domed and turreted mosques. One more stop: the elaborate sultan's 16th century home called Topkapi Palace, a complex of buildings with opulent rooms linked by courtyards and passages.

Istanbul's neighborhoods embrace the old and the new. Many of the famed mosques are in the historic Sultanahmet district. Head to the modern Beyoglu to find clubs, restaurants and shopping, especially on Istiklal Street, known as the "Fifth Avenue of Istanbul".

Jon Fleming

Journalist

Jon Fleming's combination of personal experience and historical knowledge, plus an entertaining presentation style has made him very sought after in the Cruise industry as a lecturer and travel journalist. He has sailed on over 250 cruises worldwide including 10 World Cruises with Silversea.

Over the last nineteen years, Jon has lectured on over 500 cruise destinations across Europe, the Caribbean, South America, Africa, Asia, the Middle East, Australasia and the Pacific. He has an informal and humorous lecture style that aims to make history interesting, accessible and relevant for his audience, without bombarding them with dates and facts.

Jon was born in London, and studied Modern History at York University. After university he pursued a successful career in marketing, before deciding to get out of the rat race and devote himself to travel full-time either by cruise ship, or at the other end of the luxury scale, in a camper van with his wife Tracy.

His interest in travel was sparked by a two-month train trip around Europe, when he was 18, and he has been looking for excuses to travel ever since! He has travelled extensively throughout the world, visiting all seven continents and over 125 countries in the process (the number is growing all the time). Having recently sold his beloved camper van, Jon now spends his summers in Europe looking for the perfect place to finally settle down

Today's Lecture: Cozumel – Beautiful Beaches and Mayan Ruins

The idyllic Mexican island of Cozumel is renowned for world class diving and snorkelling off its stunning white beaches, but there are also fascinating Mayan ruins and genuine Mexican culture to discover too.

Tracy Fleming

Photographer

Tracy has been fascinated by photography ever since asking for her first Brownie camera at the age of 9, which led to her building her own darkroom soon after.

Unluckily for her, she was also adept at Mathematics, so she ended up studying this at York University, and then spent the next 14 years working as a Chartered Accountant in London. During those years, although her passion for photography took a back seat, that did not stop her from attending photography courses, joining a camera club as well as taking on assignments shooting weddings and studio portraits.

Then, 10 years ago she was given the opportunity to travel full time with her husband, Destination Lecturer Jon Fleming, and she has used this fantastic round-the-world experience to hone her skills in travel photography, providing thousands of photos for his presentations. She is always interested in expanding her knowledge, and constantly on the lookout for different angles on familiar subjects. Tracy will be sharing her years of experience behind the camera with you in a number of lessons that will take you from the basics of your digital camera to editing your shots, so that you can produce your own masterpieces.
